

890 a Data Exchange Server is a large or small interface that works as a unified information through port that directs things as in a direct input form using a information base is a data routing system used to accelerate the location of data recipients by sub packet number and prefixes by area code this is the utensil that makes the pipe work to control the flow from place to place Copyright © 2016 Christopher G Brown

