How do we go from ugly misshapen clouds to something that has more than only a tech savvy appeal? Why can't we find words that mean what we say when we are in love? Everybody knows what they feel when they are in love just sometimes it is so much easier to give up and say allot rather than nothing or even rather than one thing that people usually say. For example to use a phrase that makes Grammatically correct questions like the way that large companies have with telephone services, into simple word and accent free questions about what to do, like for example would you like to Buy now? - or continue shopping with this product that is like something you just saw but there are better colors in this other product?

How to go from multiple choices that don't make sense to a more exact link that makes intent complete?

Applications that text and how to make it as small as one or two options that have a greater click appeal – paraphrase with proper context...
